

I am a former employee of a radio station and understand well how the National Association of Broadcasters works. It is a self-serving trade association with a primary mission of pursuing whatever best lines the pockets of its members ... and doing so under the guise of "public interest."

Now it seems the NAB has set its sights on satellite radio and wants to limit the kinds of services it can provide ... again in the name of public interest. Hogwash! The only thing these people are concerned about is preventing competition that could threaten their profits.

Satellite radio should be allowed to provide services that subscribers are willing to pay for without unnecessary regulation. Do not allow a bunch of high-paid lobbyists determine what is in the public interest.
